Telford is the largest town in Shropshire, and one of the fastest-growing towns in the UK. Named after the civil engineer Thomas Telford (who engineered many road and rail projects in Shropshire), the town was put together in the 1960s and 1970s on previously industrial and agricultural land and smaller towns.

Telford is an area rich in history, and is often referred to the 'The Birthplace of Industrial Revolution' with many visitor attractions including ten museums managed by the Ironbridge Gorge Museum Trust.
